THE BENCH BY THE GATE

I usually leave school in a rush, headphones on, thinking about the next thing I have to do. One afternoon, as I was walking out, I noticed a girl sitting alone on the bench by the gate. She was just sitting there, looking down at the floor as if she didn't belong. Most people walked past her without even noticing, and at first, I almost did the same.

Then I realized I had an extra bottle of water in my bag. On impulse, I went over and offered to her. She looked up, a little surprised, and said quietly, "Thanks." That was it. Nothing dramatic, no long conversation, just a simple gesture.

The next day, she smiled at me in the corridor. A few days later, we ended up walking out together. It didn't mean we became best friends right away, but I could see her felt a little lighter, a little more comfortable. That moment made me realize that kindness doesn't have to be big or loud. Noticing someone, doing something small, and showing you care in a quiet way can mean more than anything else.

Moral: Even a small act of kindness can make a real difference in someone's day.

MOTHER'S LOVE

In a world where comfort and hunger collide,
Her silent battles are hidden inside.

Morning arrives with a heavy sigh,
Her children ask, but there's no food to try.
Today felt different—she found bread in the bin,
For those without money, survival wears thin.

She ties stones to quiet her hunger's call,
Premits she ate, though she had nothing at all.
Another alone, with no hand to share,
Fills her stomach with water so her kids get their share.

Thank God and be happy for what you receive,
It's more than many who silently grieve.
If you have a mother, you are truly blessed,
Her love is a shelter, stronger than the rest.

A mom's hunger tells a story untold,

IMPORTANCE OF SOCIAL SCIENCE EDUCATION AT SCHOOL LEVEL

Education is not only about learning facts and formulas but also about understanding the world around us. Social science helps students develop this understanding from an early age. Subjects like history, geography, political science, and economics teach students how societies function and how people interact with one another and the environment.

Through geography, students learn about the Earth, climate, natural resources, and the relationship between humans and nature. This encourages environmental responsibility and awareness of sustainable living.

History helps students understand the past and appreciate the struggles and achievements that shaped the present world. It also teaches the importance of peace, cooperation, and respect for different cultures and communities.

Political science and civics help students become responsible citizens by teaching democratic values, rights and duties, and the functioning of governments and institutions. This prepares them to participate actively in society.

Social science education also develops critical thinking and analytical skills. Students learn to understand social issues, examine different viewpoints, and think about solutions to real-life problems.

In conclusion, social science education plays a vital role in shaping informed, responsible, and socially aware individuals. It helps students understand society and prepares them to contribute positively to the future.
